What s the difference between a service dog, therapy dog and companion dogs?

A Service dog is an extension of the person for whom they work. They require very specialized training usually from puppyhood. They are often the dogs that lead the blind, help a person who is hearing impaired, or mobility impaired. Service dogs are covered by the Americans with Disabilities Act and are allowed to go anywhere their human needs to go.

Therapy dogs are family owned pets that have great temperaments, love people, have good obedience skills and have an owner that wants to share their dog with others on social-based visits. Therapy dogs are NOT covered by the Americans with Disabilities Act and therefore can only go where they are invited.

Companion dogs are generally those that provide comfort to an individual. One example is for someone who is anxious and feels comforted by having their dog with them in new settings etc.
